At Least Colored Man Was Sure of One Thing, He Wouldn't Work With the Pie.

An old negro man was standing by grassy yard in front of a Chinaman's washhouse when a woman walked to the street corner near by to board a car. The old man approached her and, lifting his hat, politely said: "Lady, can you tell me where I can obtain a

He held in his hand a loosely wrap ped package, from which protruded the edge of what was apparently a fivecent pie.

The lady replied that he might ask the Chinaman for the job of cutting the grass. So the colored man bar gained with the Chinaman to cut the grass, for which he was to receive 25

Then it turns out that the Chinaman lawn mower is a long way off at his home and he is disinctined to go after it, for the way is weary, the flesh tired. The lady finally suggested in a mat ter of fact way: "Are you going to cut the grass with the pie?" The colored man drew himself up with great dignity and replied, reprovingly:

"Lady, I never cut grass with a pie."

The candidate who gets the vote of the fair sex ought to receive a handsome majority.

THE JOYOUS FOURTH

By William Gerard Chapman

Gee, don't I wish the Fourth wuz here! It seems like I can't wait Until the days jest catch up with That blame' red-figger date. I got a lot o' fire-works, Oh, more'n you could think,

A bully cannon, too, of brass, So shiny makes you bimh.

The minute when I get awaite, Bout four o'clock or so, You bet I'll hustle in my clothes An' grab my box an' go A-hitin' out behin' the barn An' light my punh - an', say! You won't hear nothing much but notee

The rest o' that whole day.

But, goshi that ain't a circumstance To what'll happen when It gets right dark. You jest be there, You'll see some dom's, then! We'll break in St, the blacksmitn's, shop

An get his anvils out An' shopt them all around the town; Then there'll be noise, don't doubt!

Afore each house we'll set one down An' pour the powder in, An' set the other top of it -Then jest you hear the din! Some folks'il come a-runnin' out An' raise an awful row. But most'll laugh like fun an' shout "Jest get along, boys, now."

Oh, gee, I wish the Fourth wuz here! But Ma sez, "Mercy me! Why you're so set on gettin' burns An' blisters, I can't see." But shucks! who cares for things like that? A boy's Ma never learns ton was for Sharpless, who made a mathematically correct profile which of being punished by English invaders. furnishes the authority for the proportions of the subject's features.

As how he has jest loads o' fun A-gettin' of those burns. (Copyright, 1815, by W. G. Chapman.)

Of all painters, none achieved more than Gilbert Stuart, who, it is generalthat he kept his subject from selfensciousness by entertaining him. In the two originals of this artist, and in the fwenty-six copies which he made. he left noble personification of wis-dom and serenity to the American peo-ple in the person of the first president of the nation. In color and finish, as well as in lifelike resemblance of features, no Washington artist has approached him. At the time of the Stuart sitting Washington's mouth appeared rather unnatural on account of two new seahorse lvory front teeth which substituted for the general's own. The failure of the first portrait, which was destroyed, was probably traceable to this fact.

The Stuart picture of Washington standing with a sword in his left hand was made expressly for the Marquis of Lansdowne, who was so delighted with the canvas that he declared it was only his advanced years which prevented his crossing the ocean to thank Washington for allowing this picture to be taken.

Although several copies of this painting were made by Stuart, the painting in the White House, so long considered his, was not done by that master. It is the work of an obscure artist, who substituted his own copy for an original which the government purchased for $800.

for several days. This was because fy all demands.

As Stuart did not excel in representing Washington's figure, this picture does not meet all the requirements of a good painting. The hand is said to ly agreed, has given to the world the best likeness of the man. Stuart's model of his own hand in making the success was probably due to the fact Stuart's famous Washington por trait, made for Mrs. Washington, was never entirely finished, because the artist always managed to delay completing the background. Finally, Washington, after frequent sittings, became annoyed and told the artist that he would sit no more, but to send the picture home when it was finished.

Later, when he saw the advantage which having such an original afforded Stuart, who was thereby enabled to make numerous copies, he told the artist that he himself would be satisfied with a copy.

property of the Boston athenaeum. Stuart's freshness of color, his skillful modeling of the forehead, the dignity yet kindliness shown in the picture, image all that a grateful people expect to find in the sublime character painting for future generations, for when someone suggested to him that he had made Washington's eyes too blue, he answered that in a hundred years the color would be just right.

DOG VALUABLE IN WARFARE

Intelligent Animal Brings Sorely Needed Ald to Wounded During a Lull in the Fighting.

A war correspondent speaks of a family, told how his life was saved by the pet dog of his regiment. Struck by a fragment of shell in the arm and with a saber cut over the head, the wounded man was lying half-covered by the dead bodies of his com-rades, when he felt a light touch on his forehead. It was Tom, the regiment's dog. In spite of his pain the soldier tried to raise himself up a little. He know that the animal was trained to carry to the camp a wounded man's cap, but he had lost his own. The dog hesi-tated, and the soldier said to him:

Run quickly, Tom; go and find my comrades. Go on-find them!" Then Tom understood. He dashed away to the camp, ran about among the men, pulling their coats and bark ing, and at last succeeded in drawing two ambulance men to the spot where the wounded soldier lay.
